Extrait du chapitre « Congressional trading insights », à partir de 42:01. Meb Faber interroge Michael Venuto sur les fonds NANC et KRUZ (aujourd'hui GOP).

Meb Faber — 43:14

Talk to us about these funds. What are they doing?

Michael Venuto — 43:16

So the client here is a company called Subversive, and they partnered with Unusual Whales to partial out the data. So the data is public disclosure. Anybody can go get it. The problem is it looks like gobbledygook. It's not like they're putting a lot of effort into making this usable data. So Unusual Whales helps out with, you know, really partialling through the data. Then that data is sent over to Tidal. We have also as a service here active portfolio managers. So Dan Weiskopf spends a lot of time poking through the data to try and find the patterns. And patterns are things where we know there was a committee hearing or we know that multiple people did it at once. Or, like, for example, no Republican had reported buying Tesla until Marjorie Taylor Greene did it the day before the election. So things like that we look for.

Michael Venuto — 44:21

And that's it. Now some of them have a broker who's just doing some direct indexing for them. We have to weed through that noise in the data. When we see 300 trades and they were all, like, this big, 5 shares of something, we know that's just a rebalance. Right? So it's all about getting down to the nitty gritty of what they're actually doing. And, hopefully, we capture some of that alpha that they're legally allowed to do...

Ce que cet extrait établit, et qu'aucun document réglementaire ne dit :

- la source de données est la déclaration publique — Unusual Whales ne fait que la rendre exploitable ;
- la sélection est discrétionnaire : un gérant cherche des motifs (auditions en commission, achats simultanés, premier acheteur d'un camp) ;
- le fonds écarte le bruit des comptes gérés en direct indexing — les dépôts massifs de micro-trades sont identifiés comme de simples rebalancements et ignorés.
